TPB staff develop and maintain a series of regional travel demand forecasting models (TDFMs), which are used for regional analyses. Staff always maintain at least two versions of the TDFM: A production-use version and a developmental version. The current production-use model is an aggregate, trip-based model, sometimes called a “four-step model,” called the Gen2/Ver. 2.4.6 Travel Model. Over the last six years, staff have been developing a new, disaggregate, activity-based model (ABM), called the Gen3 Travel Model. The Gen3 Model is in its third and final phase of development. Mr. Moran will explain how TDFMs are used, describe the motivation for developing an ABM, and give a status report for the Gen3 Travel Model.
